VALUES

The International Women's Health Coalition celebrates our 35th anniversary in 2019. Over the decades, IWHC has embraced a set of enduring values that have guided and motivated our work. In 2018, we put these values to paper.

These values govern all aspects of our strategy and work, both internal and external. They are interconnected and should be read together.

Excellence

We take pride in the quality and integrity of our work and the transformational impact it has on the lives of women and girls. We ground our expertise in evidence, cross-cultural competency, and intentional listening. We challenge ourselves to ongoing learning and to holding ourselves accountable.

Feminism

We recognize that all forms of oppression are connected, and that women and girls experience multiple and intersecting forms of discrimination based on their identities, realities, and unequal access to power and resources. We believe that we must challenge patriarchal systems in order to end misogyny and achieve equality and justice.

Diversity, Equity, & Inclusion

We amplify and celebrate the voices and realities of people with less power and place them at the center of our work. We commit to creating an environment of inclusion, support, and belonging.

Generosity of Spirit

We bring our best selves and intentions to our work and show compassion and appreciation for each other. We work collectively to ensure that we all have what we need to thrive.

Trust

We foster and maintain relationships and partnerships based on respect, honesty, and transparency. We rely on each other's word and have each other's best interests at heart.

Autonomy

We uphold the rights of all individuals to make decisions and have control over their bodies and lives. We respect our partners' independence and trust them to set their own agendas and define their own strategies, just as we do.

Movement Building

We invest in collective action to drive sustainable social change. As feminists and activists, we are more effective, strategic, and powerful when we work together in solidarity.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

For 35 years, the International Women's Health Coalition has been a bold champion for sexual and reproductive health and rights. As I reflect on this organizational milestone, I am encouraged by the progress the women's movement has made.

When IWHC was established in 1984, the concept of reproductive rights was still in its infancy. Today, women's rights—including sexual and reproductive rights—are widely recognized as human rights. Women and girls increasingly wield their power and have organized to ensure that institutions are committed to achieving gender equality as the bedrock of a better world.

IWHC's support of feminist organizations, and our unique role as both a funder and an advocate, have provided us with a front-row seat to this progress. What we see is impressive. Abortion rights are increasingly being realized worldwide. Since 2000, 34 countries—from Colombia to Nepal—have liberalized their abortion laws. The practice of child marriage continues to trend downward, from 15 million marriages in 2012 to 12 million in 2018. And we are making progress on LGBTQI rights—26 countries have legalized same-sex marriage since 2000.

In the last year alone, activists continued to achieve significant change. In Pakistan, our partner Aahung began training thousands of public school teachers on health, human rights, and gender equality. In Ireland, the Repeal the 8th Campaign was victorious in securing abortion rights for Irish women. In Argentina, feminists' massive "green wave" of mobilization for safe, legal, and free abortion almost succeeded. And in India, a colonial-era law criminalizing same-sex relations was finally overturned.

Yet, some things haven't changed. Those who seek to roll back women's rights have grown bolder and more insidious in their efforts. As abortion laws have liberalized globally, so too has a movement to encourage providers to refuse to provide abortion services on the grounds of religion. And, we continue to fight the latest, and even more dangerous, iteration of the Global Gag Rule implemented by the Trump administration—a policy first introduced by President Reagan. All these years later, women everywhere continue to pay for this shameful policy with their health and lives.

35 years on, IWHC stands strong. We know that collective action is the key to change, and we are not afraid of the struggle. In 2018, we distributed $2.42 million to feminist organizations and activists worldwide—our largest amount to date. Through determined partnerships, advocacy, and feminist leadership, we continue to invest in and support social movements to fuel progress. Together with them, we are pressing our governments to do better by women and girls.

Despite decades of positive change, our work is not done. At this critical time, IWHC remains deeply committed to supporting the global women's movement. In these times, standing up for women and girls is more important than ever.

Thank you for your solidarity and for your support.

FRANÇOISE GIRARD

LETTER FROM OUR BOARD CHAIR

For the past 6 years, I have had the honor of serving as board chair of the International Women's Health Coalition. During this time, I have witnessed the transformative work of the organization and its partners in every corner of the globe. This year I will step down from my position as board chair with pride and gratitude for the work we've done to strengthen the organization and broaden its reach for women and girls.

Last November, I joined IWHC staff members and my board colleagues on a trip to visit IWHC's Brazilian grantee partners. What I saw left a lasting imprint on me. I met a young girl who found her voice through an IWHC funded educational program led by grantee Grupo Curumim—enabling her to break out of a cycle of domestic violence. I met hardworking fisherwomen in the northeast of the country who make their living digging for clams. They had organized to demand better health care from the local authorities in the face of the Zika and dengue epidemics that devastated their communities and families.

Worldwide, IWHC invests in organizations that advance women's and girls' rights because this work has significant impact, influencing policy from local communities all the way up to global agendas. In Brazil, I saw this mission come to life.

Meeting these women made me proud to represent IWHC. It showed me the immense value of our work and the unique role IWHC plays—not only as a funder, but as a partner and advocate. Each group I met shared stories of IWHC's sisterhood, solidarity, and strategic partnership. These relationships of trust form the basis of IWHC's strength, globally. Together, we are united in making change.

During my time at IWHC, I've seen firsthand how women lift each other up and raise the self-confidence of the next generation of girls. When I see how far we've come, I am in awe. I know we'll continue to thrive in the coming years. As I prepare to step down as IWHC board chair, I remain more committed to IWHC's mission than ever before.

TURNING THE TIDE

Even as attacks against sexual and reproductive health and rights mount, advocates press forward a women's rights agenda.

2018 was a year to celebrate the remarkable power of women's movements. At the global level, and across Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East, the International Women's Health Coalition and our grantee partners mobilized and fought for progressive change.

While governments worldwide slid further into authoritarianism, IWHC focused on ensuring that the women's movement remained vibrant. Over decades of work, we've learned that, during times of political backlash and social upheaval, women's organizations must receive enhanced financial and technical support in order to seize opportunities to organize and advocate for rights. We channeled our energy into fighting this backlash, and saw the tide turning for women and girls.

Together with our partners, we advocated for sexual and reproductive rights, promoting bodily autonomy, freedom from child, early, and forced marriage, access to comprehensive sexuality education, and the need for safe and legal abortion.

We worked at the United Nations and World Health Organization, and with policymakers in Washington, DC. We promoted and supported the Keeping Girls in School Act in the US Congress—a bill that helps address barriers such as child marriage and unwanted pregnancy, which keep girls from pursuing their education.

We provided financial and strategic support to advance women's rights, and our grantee partners drove progress, from Cameroon to Uruguay. In Peru, Promsex won the support of the Ministry of Education for comprehensive sexuality education in schools. In Poland, the women's movement led a successful effort to shift public opinion and block legislation that would further restrict abortion access.

As a movement builder, IWHC is proud to support and fight alongside feminist activists worldwide. Now in our 35th year, we continue our work to fight for rights and justice in every corner of the world, even in the darkest times.

SMART POWER

Pursuing Reproductive Rights in DC

In 2018, the Trump administration's anti-women policies proliferated. IWHC worked alongside grantee partners to mitigate the impact of the Global Gag Rule, and—in an effort to permanently end the policy—advocated to advance the Global Health, Empowerment, and Rights Act in the US Congress. We fought the administration's decision to remove reproductive rights from the State Department's Human Rights Reports, and supported the Reproductive Rights are Human Rights Act to reinstate reporting on reproductive rights.

Elizabeth Okumu of IWHC grantee partner TICAH and Shannon Kowalski, IWHC director of advocacy and policy, speak at UN side event.

Advancing Women's Rights at the United Nations

IWHC successfully advocated to increase funding for women's movements from the United Nations' and European Commission's joint Spotlight Initiative on Gender-based Violence—a major new funding stream. We drew media and policymaker attention to the Trump administration's decision to withdraw from the Human Rights Council and to withhold funds from the UN Population Fund, and helped block the administration's attempts to gut international norms on sexual and reproductive rights.

IWHC President Françoise Girard testifies at Brazilian Supreme Court.

Standing Up for Abortion Rights in Latin America

When Brazil's Supreme Court considered a case to decriminalize abortion, IWHC stepped in to support Brazil's women's movement. After submitting an amicus brief, IWHC President Françoise Girard was invited by the court to testify in support of legalizing abortion. In Colombia, IWHC submitted an amicus brief to the Constitutional Court to defend women's right to abortion. In a victory for reproductive rights, the court upheld the current law, which allows for abortion under limited circumstances.

RECLAIMING CONSCIENCE IN HEALTH CARE

Around the world, women are wrongly denied legal health care services based on the personal beliefs of providers.

From abortion and contraception to in vitro fertilization and gender affirmation surgery, refusal of care policies—paradoxically dubbed “conscience” provisions—increasingly threaten access to sexual and reproductive health services.

In 2017, the International Women’s Health Coalition co-hosted the first ever international convening on health care refusals, solidifying this issue on the agenda of the global women’s movement. In 2018, we established ourselves as a leading expert, advocating against these dangerous and unethical policies.

In June 2018, IWHC published Unconscionable, a report and policy brief that documents the prevalence and impact of health care refusals and lays out a bold set of recommendations to counter these provisions. In November, with our longtime grantee partner and co-convenor Mujer y Salud en Uruguay (MYSU), we launched the Spanish version of the report at the International Federation of Gynecology and Obstetrics conference in Brazil, starting a critical conversation with allies and providers.

IWHC and our grantee partners have made combating health care refusals a key tenet of our work. As a result, in Uruguay, MYSU was appointed to a newly created presidential commission to address health care refusals, presenting an opportunity to further influence national policy to protect women's rights.

At the global level, the impact of spotlighting this issue was immediate. In July, the Global Commission on HIV and the Law addressed the role “conscientious objection” played in blocking access to health care and affirmed that providers’ beliefs cannot override a woman’s right to health and life. In October, after years of advocacy by the women’s movement, the UN Human Rights Commission called for the removal of barriers that restrict access to care, including “conscientious objection,” declaring that access to safe and legal abortion services is fundamental to achieve women’s human rights.

IWHC will continue to fight against these policies and work alongside our partners to build a world in which women can access safe and legal reproductive health services without exception or obstruction.

POWER UP

PARTNERS IN PROGRESS

Our general support, flexible funding, and rapid response grants provide our grantees with the resources to lead change and confront challenges wherever they emerge.

Danedjo Hadidja, president of IWHC grantee partner Association de Lutte contre les Violences faites aux Femmes/Antenne de l'Extrême Nord

Local women-led organizations are best positioned to drive progress. As grantmakers, we practice a trust-based funding model that shifts power into the hands of our grantee partners. We build the capacity of organizations to secure women's rights, and support a global movement dedicated to achieving gender equality.

In 2018, IWHC gave $2.42 million to 35 organizations and 95 individuals across Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East. In Lebanon, our general support grant to the A Project helped to strengthen their sexuality hotline—an anonymous platform that provides judgment-free information on sexual and reproductive health. Our grant allowed the A Project to expand its reach and deliver vital information to prevent sexually transmitted infections and unwanted pregnancies.

POWER UP

We also connected grantees to international policymakers and high-level donors. In Cameroon, our grantee partner, Association de lutte contre les violences faites aux femmes – Antenne de l'Extrême Nord (ALVF-EN), worked to address violence against women, including child, early, and forced marriage. IWHC worked closely with ALVF-EN to strengthen its national level advocacy, provide input to the UN Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights on child marriage in humanitarian settings, and secure funding from larger donors.

IWHC recognizes that achieving systematic change is a long-term effort that requires investing the resources to build sustainable women's movements at the national, regional, and global levels. Our sustained support for CommonHealth in India provided the resources to help them grow in size and strength, despite a restrictive political environment and shrinking space for civil society. Today, CommonHealth is a diverse and growing grassroots coalition, committed to securing reproductive health and access to safe abortion for India's most marginalized communities.

Working hand-in-hand with our grantee partners, IWHC builds lasting partnerships to strengthen and sustain policy change.

PUTTING HEALTH INFORMATION IN THE PALM OF YOUR HAND

Technology is revolutionizing the health sector. In Nigeria, IWHC grantee partner Education as a Vaccine recently launched three mobile phone applications to increase access to sexual and reproductive health information. The app Frisky empowers youth to make informed decisions about their health by providing them with accurate information about puberty and sexually transmitted infections. The app DIVA challenges the stigma around menstruation and helps girls learn how to manage their menstrual health. And the app Link Up connects young people with health services.

POWER UP

THE ARC OF CHANGE IN ARGENTINA

From June to August 2018, hundreds of thousands of women and girls in green scarves descended on Argentina's streets to demand access to legal, safe, and free abortion services.

In Argentina, as across most of Latin America, access to abortion is restricted. It is only legal when the pregnancy is a result of rape, the woman's life is in danger, or her health threatened. Yet, access to legal abortion services varies in practice from province to province. In June 2018, after years of sustained advocacy by the National Campaign for the Right to Legal, Safe and Free Abortion, Argentina's lower house of Congress passed a landmark bill to decriminalize the procedure in the first 14 weeks of pregnancy.

For months prior to the bill's passage, Argentines around the country took to the streets en masse to demand change. This "green wave" surprised newcomers to the conversation, but for advocacy groups like the International Women's Health Coalition's grantee partners Católicas por el Derecho a Decidir (CDD-Argentina) and Centro de Estudios de Estado y Sociedad (CEDES), this mass movement was years in the making.

Though the bill was narrowly defeated in the Senate, the vote was a watershed moment for the women's movement. By framing abortion as a human rights and social justice issue, the Campaign placed abortion on the national agenda and shifted public opinion in its favor.

The strength of the Campaign stemmed from its diversity and cross-sector representation, embodied in the differing roles played by CDD-Argentina and CEDES. CDD-Argentina is an advocacy powerhouse and was a key architect of the Campaign's political and social activities. CEDES used its 40 years of research experience to inform the national policy debate about the consequences of the country's current policies. In 2011, it launched a network of health providers committed to expanding access to safe and legal abortion. Many members testified before Congress in support of the bill.

POWER UP

Though abortion remains restricted, the impact of the summer's green wave is evident. In late 2018, the Superior Court of Justice in Córdoba ruled that the province must implement an existing regulation on abortion to ensure access to those abortion services that are legal under Argentine law.

IWHC understands that for these movements to thrive, sustained funding is required. That is why we commit to our grantee partners for the long-term and work closely to coordinate strategies that strengthen women's movements at the national, regional, and global levels. As CDD-Argentina, CEDES, and their allies identify opportunities to re-introduce the bill in a favorable environment, one thing is clear: the momentum of the green wave will continue.

“BY FRAMING ABORTION AS A HUMAN RIGHTS AND SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUE, THE CAMPAIGN PLACED ABORTION ON THE NATIONAL AGENDA AND SHIFTED PUBLIC OPINION IN ITS FAVOR.”

Argentines take to the streets to support decriminalization of abortion

BUILD UP

BUILDING A COALITION AGAINST THE GLOBAL GAG RULE

The first Global Gag Rule was enacted in 1984. For 35 years, IWHC has been fighting to end the harmful policy. A new act in the US Congress provides that chance.

When the Trump administration announced its expanded Global Gag Rule in 2017, the International Women's Health Coalition mobilized quickly and established a two-pronged strategy: to document the policy's impacts and advocate for its repeal. IWHC's history with the Gag Rule runs deep—the organization was in part founded to fight the rule first decreed by President Reagan.

In 2018, with grantee partners from Kenya, Nigeria, South Africa, and Nepal, IWHC documented the harmful effects of the Gag Rule's funding restrictions on health care providers, civil society, and women's health organizations. In May 2018,

BUILD UP

Monica Oguttu, executive director of IWHC grantee partner the Kisumu Medical and Education Trust (KMET), joined IWHC in Washington, DC to provide members of the US Congress with a firsthand account of how the Gag Rule is restricting access to a broad range of women's health services, and chilling advocacy on reproductive health in Kenya.

In an effort to permanently rescind the Global Gag Rule, IWHC is also promoting and supporting the Global Health, Empowerment, and Rights Act, a bipartisan bill that would ensure that international nongovernmental organizations never again have to choose between US funding and offering comprehensive reproductive health services and information. Thanks to the persistence of advocates such as IWHC, the act was reintroduced in the US House of Representatives and Senate in February 2019. As long as the policy remains in place, IWHC will work in partnership with others to end the deadly Global Gag Rule.

Monica Oguttu of IWHC grantee partner KMET and Françoise Girard, president speak at congressional briefing in Washington, DC.

“IN AN EFFORT TO PERMANENTLY RESCIND THE GLOBAL GAG RULE, IWHC IS PROMOTING AND SUPPORTING THE GLOBAL HEALTH, EMPOWERMENT, AND RIGHTS ACT, A BIPARTISAN BILL THAT WOULD ENSURE THAT INTERNATIONAL NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS NEVER AGAIN HAVE TO CHOOSE BETWEEN US FUNDING AND OFFERING COMPREHENSIVE REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH SERVICES.”

THE FUTURE IS FEMINIST

In 2018, the International Women's Health Coalition and its grantee partners trained a new generation of feminist activists to advocate for their rights.

IWHC grantee partner MYSU conducts workshop.

BUILD UP

The global feminist movement is vibrant, determined, and growing. IWHC and its grantee partners are ensuring its sustainability for generations to come by providing advocacy trainings worldwide.

- IWHC grantee partner the Asia Safe Abortion Partnership (ASAP) trained youth champions across Asia to advocate for abortion rights. In the last six years, ASAP has trained more than 400 young leaders, including medical students and advocates, across 20 Asian countries.
- In Uruguay, longtime IWHC grantee partner Mujer y Salud en Uruguay launched “Derechos que provocan,” a 6-month virtual course to train young advocates on sexual and reproductive health and rights.
- In Brazil, IWHC grantee partner Centro Feminista de Estudos e Assessoria educated young feminists in advocacy through its online Free Feminist University.
- In Nigeria, IWHC grantee partner International Center for Reproductive Health and Sexual Rights established an institute on cross-sector movement-building to advance sexual and reproductive health and rights.

In 2018, IWHC once again conducted its signature Advocacy in Practice training to prepare young leaders to advance sexual and reproductive health and rights. These multi-day trainings ensure that advocates learn how to engage with diplomats in international negotiations, culminating in firsthand experience advancing their agenda at the UN Commission on the Status of Women in March in New York. In total, more than 250 young advocates from 35 countries have been trained through the AIP.

TWENTY YEARS OF MOVEMENT BUILDING IN TURKEY

Building a feminist force is a long-term effort. For more than 20 years, Women for Women's Human Rights-New Ways (WWHR) in Turkey has educated women about their political, social, and economic rights. More than 15,000 women across Turkey have been trained through their programs, which include raising awareness about gender discrimination and violations of women's human rights, as well as the importance of independent women's organizing. Many participants have gone on to become trainers or start grassroots organizations of their own—more than 20 women's organizations have been established as a result. IWHC first began supporting WWHR in 1999.
